Only five minutes into the first match of this year's NCAA Tournament, and the crowd had already begun to swell. As I arrived at Kettering's Blodgett Gymnasium, I noticed a sizeable number of Kentucky fans getting ready to root on the Wildcats. On the opposite end of the gym was a sea of blue and white, an energetic, frenzied crowd of Indiana fans ready to celebrate. The two sides might have been playing two of the nation's most hostile basketball rivals, but they didn't seem to mind. The matchup between the two teams was described by most as a "bloodbath" and I couldn't disagree. The first half, which concluded with Kentucky leading 56-35 with just over seven minutes to play, was an absolute barnburner. The majority of fans had traveled from all over the state of Indiana, including a sizable number from Indiana's second-largest city, Muncie. For the fans, getting to Lexington was an ordeal. A fair amount of fans had to travel all the way from Muncie to find an open hotel room, and even then, the NCAA estimated that there were only about 7,000 open rooms available across the state. Fans were split across different hotels, and most weren't even staying in the same part of town. Jordan Grady, a senior from Muncie, said it was like going to Lexington and having to find your own way. "Going to Lexington, it was like finding my way, it was crazy," he said. "A lot of people were like, 'Hey, there's a million people here and you can't go to one hotel or something?' People were like, 'We just have to find our way to Lexington.' That was the worst part about it," he said. There was no doubt that the crowd was impressive for an early morning game. There were sections of the arena that were packed to the brim, and yet it didn't feel like the fans were annoying anyone. It was tough to get a view of the Six different valgomycin-resistant mutants of Streptomyces lividans, produced during the screening of a large number of mycelial filaments, were selected. They were all very sensitive to valgomycins with a 50% inhibition concentration of 1 microM. They demonstrated a reduction in the valgomycin uptake, but no significant decrease in the intracellular activity. This activity was shown to be the same as that of the wild-type strain. A high growth temperature (44 degrees C) was found to be necessary to reduce the valgomycin uptake in the wild-type strain.
