Watering a Photo You can add striking depth to an image by reducing the brightness (or the lightness, depending on how you look at it) and increasing the darkness. This technique is called _darkening_, and it can be done in Photoshop using the Levels tool. To darken a photo, choose Image ⇒ Adjustments ⇒ Desaturate; then click OK. (Note that Photoshop offers a similar operation that is available by using the Adjustments Panel in the upper-right corner of the screen. Refer to the Introduction for information on how to access the Adjustments Panel.) The result of a desaturation is shown in Figure 6-1. Figure 6-1: To alter images with Photoshop's Levels, select the photo's layer and choose Image ⇒ Adjustments ⇒ Levels. In addition to desaturation, you can add depth to an image by adding a layer of opacity (or transparency). Although you can add depth with the desaturation feature, you can also do this by creating a new layer and dropping it on top of the image. This creates a stacking effect that draws the viewer's attention to the layer behind the image. In this way, you can create the illusion of an image that is floating or being drawn back from the viewer's eye. For example, a photograph can be shaped in this way, as shown in Figure 6-2. Figure 6-2: Use the Opacity slider to add depth to an image. To add depth, select the layer (so it appears on top of all the others) and then choose Layer ⇒ New ⇒ Layer from Background. Photoshop adds the new layer to the top of the layers with the active layer at the bottom and assigns a name to it, such as Shadow. After you create your new layer, Photoshop automatically sets the opacity of the Shadow layer to 65 percent, which is more than enough to create the illusion of depth. Then choose Layer ⇒ New ⇒ Layer from Background again and

Manning was originally given six years behind bars in May 2018. But in January this year, she successfully applied for a new sentence after seeking and undergoing gender confirmation surgery in Melbourne. Despite the change of her physical gender, Manning still faced a mandatory eight-year sentence. At a sentencing hearing before Justice Stephen Thackray on Thursday, Manning apologised for what she said was a "horrible act". "This was a terrible incident which had a devastating impact on everyone involved. I did not intend for this to happen," she said. "I am horrified at what I did, I am ashamed and feel completely worthless." If Manning were a biological male, she would have faced a mandatory minimum of two years' jail. But in Victoria, sentencing is not mandatory and judges have the discretion to impose a non-custodial sentence if they believe certain factors outweigh the criminal act. These circumstances include mitigating factors such as a lack of previous criminal history, a lack of violence in the offence, or a significant period of time during which the offender contemplated suicide. Manning had received a community service order and was placed on a restraining order preventing contact with Stevenson. After her gender confirmation surgery in January, Manning was given an eight-year jail sentence. (ABC News: Nicholas Perri) Justice Thackray said Manning had attempted to persuade Stevenson to kill himself and his own unborn child as part of a plan to conceal her crime and have children of their own. "If there is one thing that this case reveals, it is the depth of the offender's desire to both satisfy her narcissistic desires and to present herself and the life that she has decided to lead as normal and acceptable," he said. But
